Do you want to mail a letter to a stranger? Or would you like to send one to your late family member? The Missing Post Office in Awashima, Japan can help you do that. Well, this post office does not actually send the letters but keeps them open in the office for people to read. When you visit this place, you can take a letter home if you believe the letter for you.

To get here, you can take a train to JR Takuma Station and then a bus to Suda Port. From this port, you can take a ship or a water taxi to Awashima. A ship ticket only costs 360 yen each way. But if you are in a hurry, you can take the water taxi. The cost for that is 2,000 yen a person.

So, if you have the chance to visit Japan, remember to put this place on your traveling list. You will not regret coming here to read the letters and experience this very curious and special place.

Denganmal is a small village in the west part of India. Only about 500 people live there. There is no water so the only drinking water comes from two wells at the foot of a mountain. Because there are always lots of people waiting for getting water, it always takes a long time to wait and a long walk back home.

To get water, men marry a second- sometimes even a third woman. Their work is to get water for the family. They call these women "water wives". They are often widows or single mothers. They get married for "respect."

Take India woman Tuki for example, she is Sakharam Bhagat's first wife. When they were younger, Tuki had to look after the family while her husband went to work. Tuki needed to cook, clean, and feed her children, but she faced a big problem: there was no water. The only way is to walk to a well or to a river and carry water back home. It can take up to 12 hours to go there and go back home. " 33 "

Tuki said. Because of it, her husband married again and again.

Usually, water wives don't really share husbands and don't often live together. Besides getting water, they also help cook, clean and wash clothes and so on. In fact, water wives are illegal in India, but it's hard to change water wife now.

It's fun to learn new things. However, it's hard to find time when you're busy. Podcasts are here to save the day! You can listen to them any time. People often listen as they exercise. You can run or ride your bike and listen. People also listen on the way to or from work and school. Here are some great podcasts:

All Ears English

This is a podcast by two women from the US. The hosts help listeners learn English that people actually speak in the US. Sometimes their episodes are serious, but sometimes, they're really funny. In one of them, they talk all about different pizza words.

Dear Marcy

Is All Ears English too much English for you? That's OK! Dear Marcy is a podcast in Chinese. The two hosts, Marc and Mary, read letters from their listeners. The episodes can be funny or sad. It just depends on the letters from their fans. Check out Dear Marcy every week.

Mindi World News

This is another podcast in Chinese. However, this one looks at world news. The host introduces important stories from around the world. She teaches her listeners how to see the relationships between them. She also shares her own thoughts about these stories. Mindi World News is really amazing.

The Voice in My Head

I'm pretty, but not as pretty as you.
I'm smart, but not as smart as you.
I can run fast, but not as fast as you.
I can sing, but _____ 37 _____.

I hope for what you have, your gifts:
Your voice, your brains, your legs, your looks.
It's all I can think of, and it makes me so bitter.
How everything I can do, you can do better.
There's a voice in my head that says over and over:
I wish you were uglier, stupider, slower,
That every song sounded like a screaming banshee.
Then everyone's eyes would finally be on me

But another voice inside me says more softly:
If I keep thinking this way, I will never be happy.
I have to accept it. You are you and I am me.
I won't live my life jealously.

(Ready for Reading Success 1)

Every Friday morning at 4 o'clock, Emily gets up, gets a cup of coffee, and gets on her truck to meet her team. The meeting point is somewhere in the country. They are there to collect roadkill. Like birds and snakes, these poor little things lose their lives when cars drive by and hit them. Emily and her team are studying them, so they have to arrive early before the sun rises, or the ravens may eat up the dead bodies.

They are also studying a special kind of animal in this area, the San Bernardino kangaroo rat (SBKR). This small animal looks like a kangaroo only when standing, but it has nothing to do with the kangaroo family. It looks more like a rat with a long thing tail. It is the smallest kangaroo rat in the US. Sadly, there are not many SBKR now. They are losing their homes and dying quickly because of human activities. To stop SBKR and other animals from becoming roadkill, Emily and her team built underpasses for the animals to cross the busy road.

If the animals walk through the underpass, the animals and the drivers will be safe on the road. Sometimes when drivers see animals on the road, they may suddenly stop their cars, and accidents may happen. Then team is still thinking of more ways to keep both animals and drivers safe.
